Subject: Call for funding for the Operational Plan/narrative mapping of the Idjwi-Nyamusisi Nature Reserve

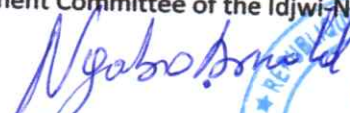

Dear donors, funders, and financial, technical, and logistical partners,

The Idjwi-Nyamusisi Nature Reserve, located on Idjwi Island in the heart of Lake Kivu in the Democratic Republic of Congo, is a major ecological and sociocultural heritage site that contributes to biodiversity conservation in the Albertine Rift. It is home to an endemic subspecies of Schoutden's blue monkeys from Idjwi Island, which is threatened with extinction, and is surrounded by a local community in a fragile socioeconomic situation whose livelihoods depend on activities in this reserve, which faces the challenge of sustainable and participatory management.

It is within this framework that the Idjwi-Nyamusisi Nature Reserve Management Committee has developed a multi-year operational plan aimed at strengthening habitat and biodiversity protection, promoting scientific research, supporting sustainable community development, and enhancing ecosystem services. This plan, whose priority activities are summarized in a narrative map, is consistent with national policies and international commitments on conservation and sustainable development. Its effective implementation requires the support of donors, funders, and technical, financial, and logistical partners, as well as collaboration at the national and international levels. The financial and technical contributions sought will enable the implementation of concrete actions for ecological restoration, environmental education, ecological research and monitoring, and improvement of the socioeconomic conditions of local communities, with a particular focus on indigenous peoples, youth, women, and other disadvantaged groups, as well as the strengthening of inclusive participatory governance. However, there are no security constraints preventing the implementation of projects on Idjwi Island, and the reserve, supported by its partners, has all the organizational and technical expertise and financial mechanisms necessary to ensure the effective execution of activities.

The project leader invites partners to give favorable consideration to this request, to explore the terms of collaboration or financing, and is available to provide the projects already designed, additional information on the Operational Plan, and our narrative mapping.

For the Management Committee of the Idjwi-Nyamusisi Nature Reserve,

Arnold Bisimwa Ngabo
Director and Site Manager
